BALCH GENEALOGY.

WITH rare exceptions the name of Balch has been so spelled since the emigrant ancestor came to America. The exceptions, Baltch and Baulch, are so rare that they are hardly worthy of notice.

JOHN BALCH[1], the ancestor of the family in New England, was born in 1579, and lived in Bridgewater, Somersetshire, England. He was one of the company that came to America, with Capt. Robert Gorges, in September, 1623, and established the fishing station at Cape Ann. In 1626, with the company, he removed to Naumkeag, which upon the arrival of Endecott was named Salem. In 1639 he built a house and made his permanent home on Bass River Side, in what is now Beverly, where he had been granted two hundred acres of land two years previously. His house, as it was originally, is shown in the frontispiece.* He was made a freeman in 1630; and held many offices in the town government. He married, first, Margaret ——, who died in 163–. PART OF IPSWICH IN 1700.

BY SIDNEY PERLEY.

The section of Ipswich included in the map presented on page 17, is bounded by South Main and Market streets, Topsfield road, and Ipswich river. The map is based on actual surveys and title deeds, and is drawn on a scale of two hundred feet to an inch. It shows the location of all the houses and the mill that were standing in 1700.

The river was called Mill river in 1674, Ipswich river as early as 1725, Town river, 1729, and Ipswich mill river, 1764.

Market street was probably a path before Jan. 13, 1639, when the town agreed "that Mr Apleton shall make a sufficient cart bridge over the swamp towards the Mill to maintayne and repair the same, at his own charge for the space of seven years next following, in consideration whereof the town hath granted him about one acre and a half of ground, more or less, adjoyneing to his six acre lott to begin where his six acres begins and to run to the brook where that ends."* This was called the country road in 1729; and Market street as early as 1833.

Topsfield road came into existence in consequence of the vote of the town, March 2, 1637, that "All those that have planting ground by the River side beyond Mr. Appleton's are to take the lott layers and lay out a highway as may be most convenient as themselves can best agree and return it to the eleven men."* This was called the Country road in 1737; Road to Topsfield, 1753; and Topsfield road, 1836.

Union street was probably in existence very early, being laid out as a way to the mill, and called the Road to mill in 1759; road leading to the town mills, 1760; road to the cotton factory, 1833; and Union street as early as 1846.

Saltonstall street was also in existence very early, and was probably the original way to the mill. It was called a highway in 1672; highway leading to ye mill, 1713; highway leading to the grist-mills, 1729; lane to Farley's mill, 1779; road to the cotton factory before 1833, when it was first called Winter street, the name being recently changed to Saltonstall street.

In the sketches that follow, after 1700, titles and deeds referred to pertain to the houses and land under and adjoining but not always to the whole lot, the design being after that date to give the history of the houses then standing.

The Mill. The lot on which the mill was situated, the eastern portion, including the swampy section, being called "The mill garden," was granted to Richard Saltonstall, in 1635 for the site of a grist mill.* A dam was constructed and the mill established. After the death of Richard Saltonstall the mill came into the hands of his son Col. Nathaniel Saltonstall of Haverhill, and the millers were for many years Michael and Mesheck Farley. Colonel Saltonstall died in 1707, and in his will he devised the estate to his children, Elizabeth, Richard and Nathaniel. Other mills, as a grist mill, saw mill and fulling mill, were built before 1729, when the property came into the possession of John Waite, jr. The next owners were Michael Farley and Nathaniel Brown. The Farleys subsequently owned and operated the mills for a century. Then followed the Ipswich Manufacturing company, Dane Manufacturing company, Ipswich Hosiery company, etc., successively. The original mill was probably gone in the days of the Saltonstalls.

Thomas Safford House. This lot was originally the property of Gen. Daniel Dennison, having been granted to him by the town April 20, 1635, it being described as "a house lott neere the Mill, containing about two acres, which he hath paled in and built an house upon it, havinge Mr. Fawn's house lott on the southwest."* Mr. Dennison conveyed to Humphrey Griffin of Ipswich "my Dwelling house situate and being near the Mill in Ipswich aforesaid together with the yard and close adjoining to it," Jan. 19, 1641.† The estate was next owned by John Burnam of Ipswich, who conveyed the "dwelling house & house lot late of Humphrey Griffin situate near the water mill" to Anthony Potter of Ipswich 1 : 4 mo.: 1648.§ Anthony Potter and his wife Elizabeth, for eighty pounds, conveyed to John Safford of Ipswich, blacksmith, "the house and three-acre house lot on north side of the river, near the mill, bounded with highways round," Jan. 19, 1661.‡ John Safford, for his support, conveyed to his son Thomas Safford his now dwelling house, barn, shop and land, as bounded by the town streets and the Farleys, Sept. 5, 1698.‖ The house is said to have stood where the house is drawn on the map. It was gone before 1739, probably, and Mr. Safford died in 1754, having devised the homestead to his son Stephen.

Estate of Mesheck Farley House. This lot was granted to Michael Farley, upon the request of himself and his son Mesheck, "to build a small dwelling uppon where we may be near to attend ye towne service" (that is, probably, as millers, attending the Saltonstall grist mill), Feb. 11, 1683. The house was built in 1686, and he conveyed the estate to the son Me-sheck, upon his marriage, Oct. 1, 1686.* Mesheck Farley died in 1696, and this place descended to his son Michael. Michael Farley was a cordwainer, and died in May, 1757, having conveyed, by deed, the old house to his son Michael. At the time his will was made, in 1751, he was living in a house he had built on the Market street side of the lot. How much later the old house stood, the writer has not learned, but the estate descended to General Farley's son Robert, who died possessed of it about 1830. It then came into the possession of Jacob Brown.

Maj. John Whipple House. This lot was granted by the town to Mr. Fawne Jan. 13, 1637, being described as "a house lott, adjoyning to Mr. Appleton's six acres near the Mill."† John Fawne, gentleman, conveyed to John Whipple a house and house lot in Ipswich, containing two and a half acres, formerly sold to grantee by John Jolly, Samuel Appleton, John Cogswell, Robert Muzzey and Humphrey Broadstreet, Oct. 10, 1650.§ It appears that Mr. Whipple bought the estate before 31 : 8 : 1642, when it was ordered by the town "that John Whipple should cause the fence to be made betweene the house late Captaine Denisons, and the sayd Jo: Whipple, namely, on the side next Captaine Denyson's and to be paid by the town for the one halfe; and the other half by the Captain."† Mr. Whipple died June 30, 1669, having devised his houses and land here to his son John Whipple, who was known as captain.

Capt. John Whipple resided here, and died in 1683. His real estate was divided among his sons in 1684, and the mansion house his father deceased in, with barn, homestead, etc., called "ye homestead" in Ipswich, of two and a half acres, was assigned to his eldest son, John Whipple. In the inventory, the homestead at town, dwelling house, kiln and other houses were appraised at three hundred and thirty pounds. This son, John, last mentioned, was Maj. John Whipple, esquire, who lived in this ancient house. In his will, dated Aug. 30, 1721, and proved June 15, 1722, he devised his "now dwelling house and homestead with all the buildings upon the same" to his daughter Mary, wife of Benjamin Crocker, and her children. Major Whipple mentioned in his will certain rooms in the house, as parlor, parlor chamber, kitchen, leanto, etc.

Mrs. Crocker died before 1766; and, after the decease of Mr. Crocker, their daughter Mary Gunnison released her interest in the estate to her brother John Crocker, they having succeeded their mother as owners of the estate under the will of their grandfather, Maj. John Whipple, being her only children, April 15, 1767.* Dea. John Crocker, as he was called, died in April, 1806, and by his will, dated May 4, 1804, the estate descended to his son John, except the great chamber in the west end of the house, the use of which he gave to his daughter Elizabeth so long as she remained unmarried. The son John, having removed to Londonderry, N. H., conveyed the homestead to his brother Joseph Crocker, subject to the rights of their sister Elizabeth in the great chamber, April 16, 1807.† Joseph Crocker died in 1812 or 1813, and his heirs, except his sister Lydia, wife of Col. Joseph Hodgkins, released their interest in the estate to her and her husband May 16, 1813.§ Colonel Hodgkins died Sept. 25, 1829; and his heirs conveyed the house, barn and present lot to Caleb K. Moore of Cantlebury, N. H., Oct 1, 1833.‡ Mr. Moore conveyed the property to Abraham Bond of Ipswich, manufacturer, Oct. 7, 1841.‖ Mr. Bond died June 24, 1868, and the estate descended to his son

James W. Bond, who conveyed it to the trustees of the Ipswich Historical Society May 12, 1898.* The ancient edifice was subsequently renovated, the great fireplaces opened, the rooms restored to their original appearance, and furnished in accordance with colonial customs. This is "the home" of the society. The view of the house given herewith shows its rear and one end as they now appear.

Rev. Samuel Belcher House. A part of this lot was granted to Major Denison, the grant made by Ipswich, Jan. 13, 1637, probably being this. The land is described therein as follows: "a house lott next to Mr. Fawnes, to come to the scirt of the hill next the swamp."† John Burnham conveyed it to Anthony Potter of Ipswich, and Mr. Potter conveyed it to Samuel Belcher April 8, 1672.§

The rest of the lot was owned by Jeremiah Belcher of Ipswich prior to 30 : 7 : 1652, when he entered into a marriage contract with Mary Lockwood of Ipswich, and conveyed to Mr. Robert Paine and Robert Lord, both of Ipswich, and Richard Browne of Newbury, on her behalf, his dwelling house, etc., and land in Ipswich near the mill,‡ etc. Mr. Belcher died in 1692; and his widow, Mary Belcher, conveyed the lot that Mr. Belcher had conveyed to her to her son Samuel Belcher Nov. 11, 1692.‖ The house was apparently gone from this part of the lot. Samuel Belcher thus became possessed of the entire lot. He had built a house on the other part of the lot before this date.

Mr. Samuel Belcher was pastor of the church at the Isles of Shoals several years, but returned to Ipswich, where he spent the remainder of his life. Sept. 15, 1713, when he was living in Newbury, he conveyed to Capt John Whipple of Ipswich, the house, barn and lot;¶ and the next day Mr. Whipple conveyed the estate to Mr. Belcher's wife Mary.* In 1729 and 1753, the estate was owned by William Brackenbury of Ipswich, who died before 1764. William Brackenbury "of Halifax county, Province of North Carolina, now of Ipswich," planter, conveyed the lot of land to Nathaniel Farley of Ipswich, miller, April 30, 1771.† This grantor was probably son of the earlier owner; and the house had probably been removed.

The Miller's House. This lot was a corner of the Samuel Belcher lot purchased of Anthony Potter, as above stated. Mr. Belcher, being at that time at the Isles of Shoals, conveyed to Richard Saltonstall, esq., this lot of about six rods near the mill "to set a house upon for the miller," bounded north by common land or highway where gravel hath been digged, west by a fence of pales," etc., April 20, 1672.§ Upon the decease of Mr. Saltonstall the lot and the house that had been built thereon, by Mr. Saltonstall descended to his son Col. Nathaniel Saltonstall of Haverhill, in connection with the mill. Upon the death of Colonel Saltonstall, in 1707, by his will the property became his children's, Elizabeth, Richard and Nathaniel. Richard died in or about 1714, and Richard Saltonstall of Haverhill, esquire, and Nathaniel Saltonstall, jr., of Boston, gentleman, conveyed to John Waite, jr., clothier, and Samuel Dutch, bricklayer, both of Ipswich, one-third of the property April 2, 1729.‡ Mr. Dutch conveyed his interest therein to Mr. Waite Dec. 1, 1729.‖ Nathaniel Saltonstall and others conveyed their interest in the property to Mr. Waite Sept. 10, 1729.‖ Mr. Waite conveyed to Nathaniel Brown of Ipswich, clothier, the house and lot Nov. 19, 1741.¶ Mr. Brown died, and the guardian of his minor son, Nathaniel Brown, conveyed the same estate to Nathaniel Farley of Ipswich, miller, Jan. 4, 1753.* Jonathan Cogswell, esq., was owning the property, May 9, 1797, when he conveyed the house and lot to Daniel Farley.† Mr. Farley lived in Newburyport, and was a mariner. He conveyed the house and lot to Joseph Farley of Ipswich, mariner, Sept. 28, 1801.§ The same house was perhaps standing in 1836, but it is doubtful.

John Appleton Lot. This lot was granted to Mr. Samuel Appleton by the company of freemen Sept. 26, 1638,‡ being described as follows: "Eight acres of Land, more or less, as it lyeth above the Mill, bounded on the Southeast by the Town River, also having a house lott, formerly granted to John Fawn on the Northeast, also on the Northwest the highway leading into the common." Upon the decease of Mr. Appleton in 1670, the title passed to his grandson Capt. Samuel Appleton. Captain Appleton died in 1693, and the lot descended to his son John Appleton of Ipswich, clothier. The latter conveyed it, with other land on the south, lying between the highway and the river, twenty-five acres in all, to Daniel Appleton of Ipswich, merchant, May 5, 1725.‖

WILL OF JOHN BRADLEY.

The nuncupative will of John Bradley of Salem was proven by Ursly Greenoway before the governor and court, probably in Boston, 28 : 5 : 1642. The following is a copy of the testimony as it is recorded in Suffolk Probate records, Boston, volume I, page 21(16).

The last [will] & Testament of John Bradley of Salem deceased the fourth month 1642 as he related to us while he was of pfect memory. Ursly Greenoway deposed saith, that John Bradley of Salem deceased being asked in the time of his sicknes what was his will, & perswaded to make a will, did aske why he should make his will, he had nobody to give his estate but his wife, only some of his cloths & tooles he gave to his brother in lawe william Allen.

JOHN WINTHROP THE YOUNGER.

BY GEORGE FRANCIS DOW.

John Winthrop the younger, founder of Ipswich and the sixth governor of Connecticut, was born at Groton, county of Suffolk, England, on Feb. 12, 1605-6. He was the son of John Winthrop, afterwards governor of the Massachusetts Bay Colony, and was educated at Trinity college, Dublin, and at the Inner Temple, London, where he studied law. He soon abandoned the law and entered the naval service where he served under the Duke of Buckingham in his unsuccessful expedition for the relief of the French Protestants at Rochelle. After a tour of the continent he returned to London in August, 1639, and found his father actively engaged in organizing the first great emigration to the shores of New England, which sailed in the following March. He married his cousin, Martha Fones, Feb. 8, 1631, and six months later they embarked for New England.

Not long after his arrival at Boston, he was elected an assistant, or member of the council, and a year later, in March, 1632-3, he took with him twelve men and began a plantation at Agawam, afterwards called Ipswich. Early in the fall of 1634 his wife and little daughter died, causing an entire change of plans for the future, and soon after he returned to England. Here he was commissioned governor and placed in charge of a company to be planted in Connecticut, Lords Say and Brook being among the projectors of the scheme. Before sailing, Winthrop married Elizabeth Reade, a step-daughter of Rev. Hugh Peter. A fort was built at Saybrook and a settlement made, but Winthrop seems to have spent much of his time at Boston, where his young wife was living, and before long was at Ipswich, where, Feb. –, 1637, he was chosen one of the prudential men. In June, 1638, he received authority to set up salt-works at Ryall Side (Beverly), which was done; and there he spent much of his time during the next two years. In the autumn of 1640, he obtained a grant of Fisher's island, on the Connecticut shore, and, Aug. 3, 1641, sailed for England to organize a company. This was finally accomplished and he returned to New England in 1643.

From various causes the Fisher's island project was temporarily abandoned, and Winthrop became active in establishing iron works at Braintree. In Jan., 1645, he sold his farm at Ipswich and not long after removed to what is now New London, Conn. He is said to have built the first house in that part of Connecticut. May, 1650, he declined re-election as assistant, an office which he had held for eighteen years, and thereafter cast his lot entirely with the colony at Connecticut, soon taking a leading part in its government, being elected an assistant in due time, and governor on May 21, 1651, which office he held for nearly eighteen years, a longer period than was ever reached by any other chief executive in Connecticut. Governor Winthrop was in England in 1661 to 1663, and was elected a member of the Royal Society, a tribute to his scientific accomplishments.

He succeeded in his mission to England, obtaining from Charles II. a charter uniting the colonies of New Haven and Connecticut, being himself named in the charter as the first governor. In August, 1664, he was present at the surrender of New Amsterdam (New York).

During the last years of his life, his leisure hours were devoted to astronomical and chemical research. He possessed a telescope, which he afterwards gave to Harvard college. In 1672, his wife died, and April 5, 1676, while at Boston attending a meeting of the Commissioners of the United Colonies, he, too, died, and was buried beside his father, in what is now King's Chapel burying-ground.

John Atwood (No. 1, Vol. IV., p. 106) was probably born Feb. 16, 1693, and died in Pelham, N. H., July 18, 1783. He may have been a son of Philip[2] (Philip[1]); but I have found no record of the birth of a John, son of Philip[2]. It seems more probable that this John was John[3], said to have been of Bradford, son of Deacon John[2] of Charlestown, and grandson of Herman[1] of Boston.

Philip[2] was son of Philip (see Vol. V., p. 191) of Malden, Charlestown and Bradford, an emigrant from London. (Hotton's List shows a Philip, aged sixteen, in the "Planter," 1635, and another, aged thirteen, in the "Susan and Ellen," in 1635. It is possible that he entered in one and failed to sail, or was refused passage on the "Susan and Ellen" on account of age. He died in Groveland Feb. 1, 1700, aged eighty-five, having married, first, Rachel Batchelder, who died Feb. 5, 1673-4; second, April 6, 1675, Elizabeth Grover, who died Oct. –, 1676; and, third, Elizabeth ———, who died April 3, 1688.

Emigrant Philip's other children were Oliver[2], born in 1671; married, March 30, 1699, Ann Betts of Malden; Rachel[2], born Aug. —, 1653; Mary[2], born in 1655. Oliver[2] and Ann (Betts) had Anna[3], born Jan. 9, 1699-1700; Elizabeth[3], born Sept. 17, 1702; died in Malden July 31, 1703 (G. S.); John[3], born Nov. 8, 1704; Oliver[3], born Nov. 3, 1706; Betts[3], (son), born April 14, 1709; Joseph[3], born in Boston Oct. 12, 1712; Philip[3], born in Boston May 14, 1715; married Rebecca ———; and had Rebecca[4], baptized June 10, 1739; died Oct. 18, 1740; and Philip[4], baptized June 9, 1741. John[3], married, in Boston, Dec. 21, 1738, Alice Oliver, who was a widow in 1754; issue: Alice[4], born Feb. —, 1740; Anna[4], born May 16, 1742; Sarah[4], born Aug. 12, 1744. I believe Rachel (Atwood) Frye married, in Bradford, Jan. 22, 1722, Abraham Hazeltine (Abraham[2], Robert[1]), and subsequently Christopher Bartlett.

Joshua Atwood (No. 6, Vol. IV., p. 107) married Mehitable Seavey; and died July 8, 1809. Children: Hannah (No. 23), died Dec. 27, 1835; Mehitable (No. 25), married, July 11, 1768, James Foster; Rachel (No. 26), married, April 13, 1779, Phineas Hamblett; Daniel (No. 27), married, Nov. 26, 1789, Elizabeth Gage; and died Dec. 28, 1834. Elizabeth (No. 28), married, Aug. 13, 1776, David Gage; and died March 18, 1845. Joshua (No. 29), married, Sept. 19, 1797, Sarah M. Adams; and died May 5, 1813. Ednah (No. 32), died April 20, 1813. Alice (No. 33), married, Dec. 12, 1782, Josiah Hamblett. Susanna (No. 35), married, Feb. 9, 1807, Jeremiah Stickney; and died June 10, 1839. Other children: John, born Feb. 28, 1768; David and Jonathan, twins, born June 12, 1770; latter married, March 11, 1798, Lydia Coburn; and William, born Feb. 17, 1773; married, Dec. 26, 1799, Elizabeth Hall.

362. Is it a fact that the early settlers of Eastern Massachusetts built log houses? Some were framed, but were the others built of logs, rough or hewn, piled horizontally to form a structure similar to those now used in the Maine woods or in the south? The use of the thatched roof had to be abandoned because of its inflammability, but the log house ought to have been retained on account of the ease of construction and abundance of available timber. It seems probable that in some of the seventeenth century dwellings remaining, the original log cabin should still be traced, though surrounded with additions. Is any such known? Because it is known that the pioneers of the south and west built log cabins, is it not therefore assumed that those of Massachusetts Bay did likewise? What direct evidence can now be obtained to determine this question? J. A.

THE MEETING HOUSE GREEN. By Rev. T. Franklin Waters. Salem, 1902. Paper, 8vo., 36 pages. This is a study, from the records, of the Meeting House Green in Ipswich, and the land and houses that stood around it, by the president of the Ipswich Historical society. A fine engraving of the territory forms the frontispiece. Mr. Waters' work is commended as the kind of endeavor that every local society should interest itself in, before evidence vanishes, and uncertain tradition controls.

GENEALOGY OF THE DESCENDANTS OF JOHN WHITE OF WENHAM AND LANCASTER, MASS., 1638-1900. By Almira L. White. Vol. II. Haverhill, 1900. The first volume of this work was published two years ago by Miss White, whose address is Haverhill, Mass. This volume contains 924 pages, octavo, and is bound in cloth in style like the first volume. It is illustrated with forty-eight engravings of homesteads, portraits, family groups, etc., the frontispiece being the Simon Butler homestead at Leominster, Mass. The index comprises 125 pages. The two volumes manifest the great amount of industry as well as the perseverance of the author. She states that she has manuscript sufficient for a third volume, which will be published as soon as subscriptions are obtained to meet the expense. If this is accomplished, few families indeed can boast of so extensive and complete a history and genealogy. The price of each volume is five dollars.

PART OF SALEM IN 1700. NO. 8.

BY SIDNEY PERLEY.

THE map on page 99 represents that part of Salem located on the Peabody line that is bounded north by Boston street in Salem and Main street in Peabody, and on the east by Bow street. It is drawn on a scale of three hundred feet to an inch.

The street on the north, now known respectively as Boston and Main streets, was called a highway in 1660, probably being laid out in 1647, when the bridge, known as the Stone bridge, was built over Strong Water brook. It was called ye country road or highway in 1717; road leading to Boston, 1749; road to Salem, 1757; great country road leading to Salem in 1793; and the main street in 1818. The Salem portion was called West street in 1822, and Boston street some years later. Aborn street which runs westerly across the map was probably the original road in this section to Boston. Just south of Strong Water brook, without the limits of the map, a branch turned to the north running nearly parallel with the brook and meeting with what is now Main street in Peabody, where it is shown on the map. The latter road ran over common land for more than a score of years after 1700, and continued to be a highway until about 1750 or 1760, being the better road in going to Lynn and Boston. The present Washington street, leading from Main street at the Lexington monument caused the discontinuance of the ancient road. Aborn street was called a highway in 1660; and John Robinson, aged about eighty-eight years, deposed, in 1729, "that he very well remembers that there was a road by the dwelling house of Samuel Aborn and was improved as a road from Case's and Locker's to ye said Samuel Aborn's house and so over the brook for about sixty years and upward." * It was called the highway which leads by the field called glass house field in 1707; country road, 1733; the way to glass house fields, 1735; way to Aborn's, 1735; lane in 1738; Shillaber's lane, 1760; way leading to Locker's run, 1767; way leading to Samuel Aborn's, 1770; a back road, 1774; and Aborn street in 1804. The Aborn house stood in what is now Peabody between the Locker lot and Strong Water brook on Aborn street.

The section on the south side of Aborn street was the historic glass house field. Here glass was made by Lawrence Southwick, Ananias Concline, John Concline, and Obadiah Holmes in or before 1638. After 1645, the works apparently did not thrive, though they may have been continued a number of years. In a petition of the Conclines to the general court in October, 1645, it is stated that the undertakers or company have neglected the works for the past three years. Earthen ware is said to have been made here at the glass house by the glass men. This was the centre of the persecution of the Quakers in the seventeenth century. The first meeting held in Salem by the missionaries, Holder and Copeland, in 1657, was probably held in the Southwick house, and later by the saintly Brend and the martyr Ledra. Here lived Provided Southwick, the subject of Whittier's poem, "Cassandra Southwick," Samuel Gaskin (Provided's husband), Josiah Southwick, John Hill and others. Lawrence Southwick and his wife were banished, and they died at Shelter island, in Long Island sound, of privation and exposure the next winter. Here, also, was their first burial ground.

In the sketches that follow, after 1700, titles and deeds referred to pertain to the houses and land under and adjoining, but not always to the whole lot, the design being, after that date to give the history of the houses then standing.

Estate of John Loomis Lot. The western portion of this lot was a part of the lot of one and a half acres conveyed by Ralph Tompkins of Salem, planter, to Edward Gaskill of Salem, ship-carpenter, April 22, 1659.* Mr. Gaskill conveyed it to John Lambert of Salem, seaman, in or before 1660; and Mr. Lambert conveyed ten rods of it to John Loomis before Jan. 28, 1660.† 13 : 6 : 1660, Mr. Loomis petitioned the town for a small enlargement, and he was granted about sixteen rods "between the two ways towards the town of Salem." He had already erected a house upon the original part of the lot. Mr. Loomis died about 1685. The house was gone before 1700, when the widow, Mary Loomis, and her only son, John Loomis, for twelve pounds, conveyed to John Traske of Salem, miller, "all that our land belonging to our homestead about thirty rods in Salem."‡

Samuel Gaskill House. This lot of about an acre and a half and ten rods of the estate of John Loomis lot, and the dwelling house on this lot, were the property of John Hart from about 1650 to his decease in 1656. It then came into the possession of Ralph Tompkins of Salem, planter, who conveyed the house and land, for nine pounds, to Edward Gaskill of Salem, ship-carpenter, April 22, 1659.* Before Jan. 28, 1660, Mr. Gaskill (or, Gascoine, or Gaskin, as the name was afterwards spelt) conveyed the eastern part of the lot and the house to John Lambert of Salem, seaman, and on that day Mr. Lambert re-conveyed it to Mr. Gaskill for twenty-five pounds.* Mr. Gaskill lived in the house, and when very sick, July 29, 1690, he conveyed the house and lot to his son-in-law, John Lambert, sr., of Salem.†

The estate came into the hands of Samuel Gaskill, sr. (son of Edward), of Salem, husbandman; and he conveyed the house, barn, orchard and one-half of the lot to his son Samuel Gaskill, jr., of Salem, husbandman, for the maintenance of himself and wife, April 14, 1713,‡ the other half part of the lot having become the property of the grantee, who then lived thereon. Samuel Gaskill, jr., died between 1720 and 1733, and the estate descended to his sons Jonathan and Samuel Gaskill.

Daniel Southwick, aged eighty-one, and Samuel Ebborn, aged seventy-eight, deposed, in 1717, that this lot was originally in three parts, "on which were erected, built and being three cottages or dwelling places at or before 1661, viz.: One by Edward Gaskill of Salem, husbandman, deceased; one by Thomas Hart§ of Salem, cordwinder, deceased; and one by Peter Joyce of Salem, seaman or mariner.‖

Quaker Burial Ground. This was a part of the lot of Joseph Boyce, and for five pounds he conveyed to Thomas Maule, Josiah Southwick, sr., John Small, John Burton, sr., and Daniel Southwick, all of Salem, this lot of sixteen rods, for a burying place, June 10, 1680.¶ This has been a burial ground of the Friends ever since.

Joseph Boyce House. This lot was in the possession of Joseph Boyce in 1659. In his will, dated 4 : 9 mo : 1684, and proved Feb. 18, 1694-5, he devised all his estate to his wife Eleanor for life, and then "my now dwelling house to my son Joseph" for his life, remainder to his son ("my grandson") Joseph Boyce in fee tail male. The house, barn, orchard and lot were valued at forty pounds. The son Joseph Boyce, of Salem, husbandman, released his life interest to his son Joseph Boyce of Salem, tanner, the homestead estate of three and three quarter acres, with the houses, barn, etc., Jan. 9, 1707-8.* The son Joseph Boyce[3] died possessed of the estate, and it descended to his son Joseph Boyce[4] of Salem, sadler, before Feb. 20, 1723-4, when he mortgaged it.† He became a tanner, succeeding his father in the business, and May 8, 1728, conveyed a one-half interest in the lot, house, barn, tanyard, fulling-mill, and stream to his brother John Boyce of Salem, tanner.‡ They conveyed the estate to Joseph Very, jr., of Salem, husbandman, July 3, 1734;§ and Mr. Very sold it to Benjamin Nurse of Salem, husbandman, for three hundred pounds, March 7, 1734-5.‖ Mr. Nurse conveyed the same estate, for one hundred and eight pounds, to John Sterns of Salem, tailor, June 28, 1736.¶ Mr. Sterns died in 1738, and his administrator for one hundred and twenty pounds, conveyed it to Samuel Smith of Salem, shopkeeper, Oct. 2, 1741. Mr. Smith conveyed the house and land around it to Benjamin Pickman, esq., of Salem for four hundred and twenty pounds in bills, March 23, 1749.†† For sixty-six pounds, thirteen shillings and fourpence, Mr. Pickman sold the estate to Joseph Flint of Reading, housewright, Jan. 27, 1752.‡‡ The house was probably gone soon after.

Solomon Southwick House. A part of this lot was granted to Lawrence Southwick, the glass maker, and he erected a dwelling upon it before 11 : 10 mo : 1639, when the town of Salem granted to him two acres adjoining his house and lot. 14 : 7 : 1640, the town granted to John Concline of Salem, a glass-man, five and a half acres near the glass house, and he, too, built a house upon the same before 1661. The Concline house and lot came into the possession of Josiah Southwick, and was gone before 1702. One acre at the northern end of this ground was probably a part of the land granted to Obadiah Holmes in 1638 and 1639, on which he erected a dwelling house before 1661. The house was apparently standing in 1702, but gone before 1711. Lawrence Southwick died in 1660, having in his will devised his house and lot to his son Daniel. The homestead came into the possession of the deceased's son Josiah Southwick before 1688; and he died possessed of it in 1693. In the division of the estate of Josiah Southwick, probably the house and lot came to be the estate of his son Solomon Southwick, who had removed to Rhode Island, before Nov. 22, 1711, when he conveyed the house and lot of eight acres to Joseph Boyce, jr.,* an acre at the northern end of the lot having previously become the property of Mr. Boyce. The latter conveyed the entire "nine acres in glass house field, being ye homestead where Josiah Southwick lived and died," Dec. 4, 1711.*

The house is mentioned in the deed from Solomon Southwick to Joseph Boyce, jr., above, Nov. 22, 1711, but the deed from Mr. Boyce to Mr. Trask, twelve days later, does not convey the house and excepts "ye bricks of ye dwelling house." This would indicate that the house had been destroyed by fire or otherwise, between those dates. The difference in the consideration of the two deeds also evidences that the house was gone when the last deed was given.

The frontispiece is a view of this lot from a point on Ord street, just below where it is joined by Bow street, looking westward.

The street is Abbott street, which now runs through the original Southwick lot.

John Pickering Lot. Henry Rennalds and Ananias Concline, both of Salem, were probably grantees of this lot in separate parcels. Mr. Concline built a house before 1661, and it was gone before 1702. Mr. Rennalds owned the lot April 10, 1688, when he conveyed the four acres southwest of the dashes to Lt. John Pickering and Edward Flint.* Mr. Rennalds conveyed the remainder of the lot to John Pickering, jr., of Salem July 6, 1689.† Mr. Flint apparently conveyed his interest in the southern part of the lot to John Pickering, jr., Nov. 14, 1693.‡ John Pickering, sr., died in May, 1694; and in his will he devised this land at the glass house field to his eldest son, John Pickering, who then owned the other part. The son died possessed of the lot in 1722, having devised it to his wife Sarah, for life, and remainder to his eldest son Theophilus Pickering.

George Locker House. This lot was early owned by John Hill, who died in 1680, having devised the residue of his estate, including "three acres of upland lying in glass house field," to his wife Lydia (Buffum). She married, secondly, George Locker before 1688. Mrs. Locker was the executrix of the will of Mr. Hill, and she conveyed to Robert Wilson "the house we now live in," except her brother Buffum's new end and one-third of the orchard on ye south side adjoining to it next John Pickering's, and one-third of ye hill, and one third of the planting land by Samuel Ebourn's in ye middle field in ye place called ye glass house field, April 1, 1696.§ Mr. Wilson conveyed the same to Mr. Locker July 17, 1696,‖ and the latter lived here many years after 1700. How long after 1702 the house was standing has not been determined.

BOXFORD PARISHES IN ENGLAND.

BY OSCAR FAY ADAMS.

BOXFORD IN BERKSHIRE.

(Population: 549 (1891). 53 miles from London (Paddington terminus of Great Western), station at Newbury. Parish church, St. Andrew; register from 1558; living, a rectory. Other churches and chapels: Primitive Methodist; Wesleyan.)

The New England town of this name, the Massachusetts Boxford, was thus designated, according to one authority, for Boxford, England, but the precise location of the English original this same authority does not so much as hint at. In Perley's history of the town the name is thought to be derived from the Berkshire Boxford, while a third writer declares that the town probably received its name from Boxford, England, where was born the Reverend Samuel Phillips, pastor of Rowley in 1685. As the aforesaid pastor of Rowley was a native of the English county of Berkshire it would thus appear as if the Berkshire Boxford rather than the Suffolk town were the sponser of the Massachusetts town, and, at second hand, for the only other American Boxford, a locality in Missouri. But because of its somewhat close association with several of the early settlers of New England the Suffolk town, is also described below.

If we take the Lambourn road leading northwest from Newbury we shall arrive, after a walk of four miles, or a little over, at the small village of Boxford, in the midst of a pleasantly rural neighbourhood near the little stream known as the river Lambourn. There is not much to see in Boxford, a purely agricultural parish including within its limits the hamlet of Westbrook as well as the village of Boxford itself. Strangers are usually shown the cottage long inhabited by Oliver Sampson, a Quaker many times imprisoned for refusing to pay tithes, and it is fair to assume that the conscientious Oliver was wholly unacquainted with the interior of the parish church, since he objected so strenuously to parish tithes. The church is an unpretending structure, built in 1670, and distinguished only by its low western tower. The principal monument is one to the memory of James Anderton, rector here in 1672. The village boasts one inn, The Chequers, and the hamlet can show the Bell Inn, and with these the tale of the parish hostelries is complete. A mile and a half westward is the village of Wickham, of some interest to the archæologist on account of the Saxon tower of its church, but the ordinary traveller will probably trouble himself very little about this and after a brief stay at Boxford will find his way back to pleasant Newbury.

BOXFORD IN SUFFOLK.

(Population: 873 (1891). 58 miles from London (Liverpool St. terminus of Great Eastern), station at Sudbury. Parish church: St. Mary; register from 1587; living, a rectory. Congregational chapel. National School. Industries: milling, malting, brewing, brick and tile works.)

The Suffolk parish of Boxford is situated in the southern part of the shire, six miles from a railway, and in the midst of gently rolling farm lands. The village is to be found at one corner of the parish, very near the boundaries of the neighbor parishes of Edwardstone, Assington, and Groton, and may be reached, as it was by the writer, from Hadleigh, six miles east, at the end of the Hadleigh branch of the Great Eastern railway, or from Sudbury, as far to the west, on the Stour Valley branch of the same system. As the highways between Boxford and Sudbury are better than those to the eastward, it will perhaps be found best to approach the village from Sudbury, but there are pleasing rural landscapes along either route. Boxford village appears to its fullest advantage from its being nearly all concentrated upon two streets; a long one extending east and west, and another crossing the upper, or eastern end of the first one. The noisy little river Box, its waters turned to account by the wheels of several flour mills, flows through the place and, very near the church, is spanned by a bridge over which passes the road to Sudbury. To north and south the land rises gradually, and from these gentle heights a pleasant prospect is afforded of the village with its great flint church, the fertile fields surrounding it, and the tower of Groton church above the treetops near it, a scant half mile away.

The dwellings, in most cases, do not exhibit signs of great age, although not a few must be of seventeenth century date, but they have a comfortable, homelike aspect, lining the street in close, neighborly fashion. On the north side of the way, but in the parish of Edwardstone, is a small graveyard in which the Congregational chapel stands, a plain modern structure, much resembling a Friends meeting house. Opposite The Fleece inn at the upper end of the village, and reached by a footbridge over the narrow river, is a long, gambrel roofed mansion, the residence of Mr. Kingsbury, a builder of Boxford, that looks very much like the New England rural home of some representative of "the Brahmin caste" of the region. Still farther north, beyond the Chequers inn, is a second long, large house, with projecting upper story, in this instance, dazzlingly clean in its coat of whitewash, and bearing the date M. D. C. L. V.

The village shows less than the usual number of public houses, for one of its size, but as there is a police station with court room, a superintendant, and two constables, it is reasonable to infer that the parish affords occasional employment to these officials. But that crime is not rampant in this corner of Suffolk may be also inferred from the circumstance that the police station has but two cells. The national school can accomodate two hundred children on occasion, but the Queen Elizabeth Grammar School that once flourished here, and that John Winthrop may have known, has long been but a memory.

St. Mary's church is the chief object in Boxford, both as regards size and interest, a spacious edifice of the Early Third Pointed period, displaying much variety of tracery in its many windows, with here and there suggestions of flamboyant motifs. It includes a clerestoried nave, choir, aisles prolonged to the east end of the choir, the southern aisle being the broader, north and south porches, the former of oak with groinings of the same material, the other of stone and unrestored and at the west end an embattled tower containing a clock and eight bells, and surmounted by a slender spire, or fleche. Save for the north porch the whole building was restored in 1888.

The nave is five bays in extent, the arches in the pier arcades being of unusual width, yet not so wide, however, as the two arches on each side of the choir looking into the aisles. There is a carved oak door in the tower, and a small door in the south choir aisle in addition to the entrances from the porches. Floods of light stream through the great windows effectually dispelling any religious gloom that might gather otherwise in the corners. St. Mary's has no monuments to show the visitor, and but few mural tablets either. Among these few, however, the writer discovered one in the north choir aisle bearing the following inscription:—

In Memory of Elizabeth Hyam of this Parish, for the fourth time a Widow:
who by a Fall, that brought on a Mortification, was at last hastened to her End
on the 4th May, 1748, in her 113th Year.

There is a subtle ironical flavour in the expression "hastened to her end," when taken in connection with the tale of the years of the widow Hyam, and but for that untimely Fall, and consequent Mortification, she might, one would think, have survived till it could have been said of her, as of the wife of Bath:

"Husbands at the church door had she five."

THE OLD SCHOOLHOUSE.

BY W. W. CLAFLIN.

Still by the quiet road it stands,
The schoolhouse built by ancient hands,
Beneath whose oaken lintel low
Gathered the youth of long ago.

Where throned upon his chair of state,
Behind his desk the master sate,
And armed with rod and spartan rule,
Reigned awful o'er the village school.

Those rude old benches—built to seat
Each urchin high with dangling feet!
How many a tender limb grew sore,
Longing in vain to touch the floor.

Still stands the house, but altered quite—
The old red clapboards now are white,
And seats within, of modern mould,
Another race of urchins hold.

COLONIZATION OF THE OLD NORTHWEST TERRITORY.

AT about the year 1744, when New York was the most western settled province, some persons in England proposed the settlement of the valley of the Ohio; and in 1753 Washington was engaged in making a survey of the region for a company. Ten years later an association, called the "Indiana company," sought a grant of that section from the crown; but the acts of the mother country in her dealings with the American colonies frustrated a furtherance of the attempt.

As soon as the final act in our separation from Great Britain, at the close of the war of the Revolution, had been concluded, a plan was conceived for the formation of a new state along the Ohio river, to be known by the name of Ohio. In the latter part of March, 1783, Col. Timothy Pickering of Salem, who had served as a military officer under Washington, promulgated the plan, in which some of the principal officers in the army were interested with himself. With this act of Col. Pickering the company which afterward settled the territory originated.

The scheme included the formation of an association that should adopt a state constitution before the settlement was begun, and grants of the land should be principally for the benefit of the soldiers of the Revolution and their families.

Oct. 14, 1784, Elbridge Gerry of Marblehead, famous as one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, a member of the Provincial congress, and friend and ally of Samuel Adams, when a certain committee presented a report upon western lands, moved to amend it consistently with the plan of Colonel Pickering. Congress voted that it would take control in any new state until the settlers assumed a temporary government.

The Ohio river was the great artery of the Northwest territory, which was a fertile country, with diversified and well-watered soil. Before the settlement was begun, in August, 1784, M. St. Jean De Crevecœur, consul of France for the Middle states, sailed up the Ohio river, and in writing of his trip said: "I consider then, the settling of the lands, which are watered by this river, as one of the finest conquests that could ever be presented to man; it will be so much the more glorious, as it will be legally of the ancient proprietors, and will not exact a single drop of blood. It is destined to become the source of force, riches, and the future glory of the United States."

Rufus King of Newburyport and Elbridge Gerry, both members of the Provincial congress, were appointed, in 1785, agents of Massachusetts for fixing the terms upon which the claim of the state upon the territory would be relinquished. They seem to have made the total and irrevocable exclusion of slavery a condition precedent.

March 1, 1786, delegates from eight counties of the state met at Boston, in the tavern called the "Bunch of Grapes," to form the articles of agreement of the company. It was voted that the association be named "The Ohio Company." Dr. Manasseh Cutler of the Hamlet parish in Ipswich (subsequently incorporated as the town of Hamilton) was one of a committee of five to prepare a plan of association or articles of agreement. The plan adopted provided that the business be conducted by a board of directors consisting of three persons; and, March 8, 1787, he was chosen one of the three.

When the ordinance of 1787 came up in congress, Doctor Cutler went to New York, and conferred with Nathan Dane of Beverly, a native of the Hamlet, and at that time a member of congress. July 6 he presented his petition for the purchase of lands for the Ohio company, proposing terms and conditions. He called on the president of congress, General St. Clair, and other members of that body. This important law had been drawn by Mr. Dane, aided by Doctor Cutler. It established a government in the western federal territory, and expressly prohibited slavery therein. It was passed July 27. The terms of purchase of the land were accepted just as they were offered, and six million acres of land thus passed to the Ohio company. Doctor Cutler signed this private contract, which was an indented parchment. He then dined with General Knox, a large number being present, all old Continental officers except himself. Baron Steuben was one of their number.

Doctor Cutler returned to Boston Aug. 29, and attended a meeting of the company, making a report of the purchase of the land of congress, which was approved and confirmed.

Nov. 23, Gen. Rufus Putnam of Rutland, of the Danvers family, was appointed superintendent of all the business relating to the commencement of the settlement of the territory, the colonists to go forward, under his direction, in companies of four surveyors, twenty-two men to attend them, six boat builders, four carpenters, one blacksmith, and nine common hands, with two wagons, etc.

The first party started from Danvers at eleven o'clock, on Monday, Dec. 3, 1787, and was conducted by Maj. Haffield White. The men constituting the party, numbering twenty-five, were from the Hamlet parish and Danvers. Those from the Hamlet had sent their baggage to Danvers on the previous Saturday; and two hours before daybreak, after breakfast at Doctor Cutler's house, the Hamlet party marched to Danvers, the Doctor going with them. When ready to go the men, the Doctor's son, Jervis Cutler, John Porter, Amos Porter, Ebenezer Porter, Nathaniel Sawyer, Isaac Dodge, Oliver Dodge, Josiah Whittredge, William Knowlton, Edmund Knowlton and David Wells, paraded in front of the house, and, after a short address from the Doctor, "full of good advice and hearty wishes for their happiness and prosperity," three volleys were fired, the men being armed. The little band moved forward amid the cheers of their neighbors who had assembled to see them off to the new land of promise. At Danvers Doctor Cutler formally placed the party under the command of Major White and Capt. Ezra Putnam. The large and well-constructed wagon containing their baggage had been prepared by the Doctor, and it preceded them on the march from Danvers. The wagon was covered with black canvas, and on its sides, in white letters, the Doctor painted these words: "For the Ohio." The weather was pleasant, and the sun shone clearly.

The party arrived on the Youghiogheny, or Ohio, river, at Simrall's ferry, Jan. 23, 1788. Another party had gone from Hartford, and met the Essex county party at the ferry Feb. 14. Together they descended the Ohio in a flat-bottomed boat called the "Mayflower." April 8 they arrived at the Muskingum, being somewhat hindered by the severity of winter in preparing to go down the Ohio from Pittsburg. The natives were kindly disposed: and the prospect of happy success was everywhere apparent. These pioneers proceeded at once to build homes, and sow and plant the ground in preparation for the coming settlers. Four block houses were built of square timber, two stories high, as forts.

May 18, Isaac Dodge and Oliver Dodge of Wenham left the Muskingum for their home, for the purpose of making provisions for the erection of mills. They came on foot, being only twenty-six days from Muskingum to Wenham.

Emigration to the new country began in the early spring, and hundreds of families had gone from New England before the end of May.

After the departure of the pioneers in December, 1787, Doctor Cutler began to prepare to build wagons for the purpose of emigration. July 21, 1788, he started for the new country in a sulky he had purchased for that purpose. Ephraim Kendall of Ipswich and Maj. Peter Oliver of Salem went with him, on horseback. They passed the little Muskingum, seven hundred and fifty-one miles from Ipswich, Aug. 19, and soon were "politely" received by their friends. They gave to the place the name of "Marietta," which it still bears.

Dr. Cutler was pastor of the Hamlet church, having been ordained over it in 1771. He had studied medicine before entering Yale college, from which he graduated in 1765. He began as a man of business in the whaling fleet of Martha's Vineyard; studied law, and was admitted to the bar in 1769. While pastor of the Hamlet church he was chaplain in the army of the Revolution, in 1776. He was a friend and regular correspondent of Benjamin Franklin; and was given the degree of LL. D. by his alma mater in 1789. He was a member of congress from 1801 to 1805, and belonged to many learned societies. After a pastorate, more or less broken, of more than fifty years, he died in Hamilton July 28, 1823. The frontispiece shows the Hamlet Parish meeting house, the residence of Doctor Cutler, and the first wagon of the pioneers to the Northwest territory.

Thus began the settlement of the central part of our country. Essex county men conceived the idea, obtained the authority, and carried out the scheme. Many other prominent men were engaged in the enterprise besides those mentioned, but space does not permit to tell their parts of the work.

PART OF SALEM IN 1700. NO. 9.

BY SIDNEY PERLEY.

The map on page 149, represents a part of the present town of Peabody, which was originally a part of Salem. It is bounded by what is now Main street, Wallis street, and North river, and runs southeasterly until it includes the Trask burying ground. The plan is drawn on a scale of three hundred feet to an inch. The dotted line shows the present dividing line between Salem and Peabody.

Main street was called simply the common in 1659; ye road or highway in 1681; "ye way yt leads from ye town of Salem by land to Ipswich," 1696; highway or common, 1706; ye country road, 1726; ye town common called Stone's plain, 1736; ye road leading to Salem Village, 1750; road leading from Salem to Boston, 1760; country road leading to Middleton and Andover, 1767; great country road leading to Salem, 1779; Boston road, 1783; road from Salem to Danvers South Parish meeting house, 1806; road leading from the South meeting house to Salem, 1816; and Main street, 1852. The western end of the main street shown on the map is now Mill street and formerly Back street.

Wallis street is slightly west of the original way into the North fields. This was the nearest way to get from Salem proper into the North fields by land. It was called Ye way that leads in ye gate to ye north field by Trask's fulling mill in 1696; highway, 1743; and way leading into the north field, 1767.

The river was so called in 1694; ye old mill brook, 1695; brook yt descends from John Trask's fulling mill, 1696; brook that runs from ye fulling mill, 1709; the brook or mill pond, 1732; mill pond, 1742; Trask's mill pond, 1754; river or mill pond, 1777; brook, 1779; and alewife brook, 1806.

Strong Water brook was so called as early as 1638.

The brace marked "a" shows the place of beginning of Caller street, which was a private way in 1856, and known as Caller street in 1876, the Caller family having owned the land. The brace marked "b" shows where Grove street begins. This street was laid out about 1850.

That section of Main street between the Strong Water brook bridge and the Salem line was probably located when the bridge was built, in 1647. Before that time the road ran where the parallel lines of dots are shown, being a continuation of what is now Beaver street, and passing in the rear of the Trask burying ground. Crossing the bridge, about forty feet westerly of the brook, it passed through common land to the junction of Aborn and Washington streets. It continued to be used over the latter part of the way until about 1750. That part in the rear of the burying ground was probably little used after 1647, when the road was located south of the burial place, and finally became an unidentified part of the common lands.

This was also a part of the Quaker section, all, or nearly all, the families residing on this territory being of that faith. Lawrence Southwick, Daniel Southwick, Henry Trask and his wife Mary (daughter of Lawrence Southwick), John Smith, John Blethin, and other Friends. These names appear on the court records here as being punished for attending meetings of their peculiar order, and for embracing the Quaker faith.

In the sketches that follow, after 1700, titles and deeds referred to pertain to the houses and lands under and adjoining, but not always to the whole lot, the design being, after that date, to give the history of the houses then standing.

Fulling Mill. Upon the site of this mill a corn mill was built by Capt. William Trask of Salem about 1648, it being the third mill built by him on this stream. This was discontinued in 1652; and a samp mortar mill took its place before 1656, when the latter mill was in operation. In 1662 a new corn mill was erected on the same foundation; and this was in operation many years, probably until 1692, when a fulling mill was built upon its site. The latter mlll was in operation in 1729, but was gone in 1754.

Captain Trask died in 1666, having devised this and other real estate to his sons William and John Trask. William Trask died in 1691, having devised his half of the mills to his sons William and John Trask, who both eventually conveyed their interests to their uncle John Trask, who owned the other half.

John Trask died in November, 1729, having devised the fulling mill and "all my land as you go into the North field above the highway," etc., to his son Nicholas.

April 21, 1708, John Cooke, sr., testified that "I doe very well know & Remember that about 52 yeares agoe that there was a Samp morter mill upon ye brooke called Gardner's brooke & that there was a corne mill before that in ye same place and when ye said Samp morter mill & s^d Corne mill was downe there was about forty-Six yeares Since another corne mill erected upon the Same place & upon ye Same foundation of ye other Two mills aforesaid & that about Sixteen yeares agoe there was a fulling mill erected upon ye same place & upon ye Same brooke so called Gardners brooke near unto ye north field gate Joyning to Land formerly Henry Trafkes but now Nicholas Trafks which mill is now in ye pofsefsion of said Nicholas Trafke," etc.*

*Essex Registry of Deeds, book 20, leaf 124.

On the same day Samuel Archer deposed that "about 60 yeares Since there was a corne mill Standing upon ye brooke called Gardners brooke which was Esteemed Capt Trafks mill in ye Same place where ye fulling mill now standeth which fulling mill about Sixteen yeares ago was sett up by mr Jno Trafke ye reputed Son of ye Said Capt. John King, aged sixty-nine, and Samuel Golthite, aged about seventy years, both of Salem, coopers, deposed, April 22, 1708, "That Capt. Nicholas Trask House. This lot and the strip at the end of the Daniel Southwick lot, west of the dashes, constituted the homestead of Henry Trask, who owned it as early as 1659. His will was dated July 6, 1683; and in it he devised one-third of his real estate to his wife Mary, and the dwelling house and lot to his son Henry Trask, providing that if the son should die without issue, it should descend to the latter's sister's eldest sons, namely, Jereme, John and Benjamin; and if he died before his mother then she was to have a life estate in the whole. The daughter, Mary, was then dead, leaving a daughter Mary, who was to have her mother's part. The son, Henry Trask, apparently died, and June 11, 1694, an agreement was made with the mother, Mary Trask, who was a daughter of Lawrence Southwick, and at that time the wife of William Nichols. The agreement was carried out just a week later.* Jeremiah Meacham, jr., in behalf of his children by Mary, daughter of Henry Trask, had the strip shown on the map as the western portion of the Daniel Southwick lot, west of the dashes; Sarah Archer, another daughter of Mr. Trask, had the house and eastern part of the Nicholas Trask lot, east of the dashes; and Joseph Foster and his wife Anna, the other daughter of Mr. Trask, had the western portion of the homestead, west of the dashes. At that time (1694), the house was described as "a small old house."

Jeremiah Meacham, 2d, and his eldest son Jeremiah Meacham, 3d, both of Salem, for £4, 15*s.*, in silver, conveyed their portion to their uncle Daniel Southwick, sr., of Salem, Jan. 14, 1694-5;† and it was afterward identified with the Daniel Southwick lot and will be mentioned in connection therewith.

Joseph Foster of Salem, planter, conveyed to Nicholas Trask of Salem, who was then conducting the fulling mill, his wife Anna's portion of her father's homestead March 12, 1695-6.*

Sarah Archer, daughter of Henry Trask, to whom the middle section of the homestead and the house had been assigned, married, secondly, Abraham Whittaker of Salem, and, for £2, 10*s.*, in silver, they conveyed the house and land to Nicholas Trask March 20, 1695-6.† Widow Mary Nichols (the widow of Henry Trask) was to come and live in the house and have a garden spot as by the agreement with her.

Nicholas Trask removed to Mendon, and was a miller there, Sept. 5, 1743, when he sold this lot to Samuel Tompson of Swego, a new plantation in Dutchess county, N. Y., husbandman, the house apparently being gone.‡

John Trask Lot. This lot of marsh belonged to Capt. William Trask in 1659; and upon his death, in 1666, it descended to his son John Trask, who owned it until after 1700.

Daniel Southwick House. This lot, except the strip at the western end, west of the dashes, already mentioned, and also the lots of John Blethin and George Smith constituted the homestead of Lawrence Southwick, the glass maker. He was banished from the colony as a Quaker in 1659. He went, with his wife, to Long Island, where they died, of privation and exposure, on Shelter Island, the next spring. In his will, dated 10: 5 mo: 1659, and proved 29: 9: 1660, he devised to his son Daniel Southwick his dwelling house, orchard, etc., at Salem, provided that John Burnell shall have a house lot at the farther end of the orchard newly fenced in.

Daniel Southwick conveyed the house, barn, and three acres of upland and one and one-half acres of salt marsh to John Blethin of Lynn 28: 9: 1659;§ and it was reconveyed soon after to Daniel Southwick of Salem, husbandman.* This tract may have included the acre granted to William Osbourne and half-acre granted to William Woode, 25 : 4 : 1638, "lying neere stronge watter brooke or mille [end] brooke."

Daniel Southwick, sr., conveyed to his son Lawrence Southwick of Salem this lot, with the southwest end of the house and northwest end of the barn, Feb. 15, 1706.†

Lawrence Southwick died in 1717; and in the division of his estate in 1730 the buildings and the land on which they stood were assigned to his widow Tamsin as dower. Their son Josiah Southwick of Salem, tailor, released his interest to his brother Daniel Southwick of Salem, tanner, 9 : 3 mo : 1739;‡ and probably the other heirs released their interests to him, though the record of the deeds has not been found.

Daniel Southwick, for £180, old tenor, conveyed the house and land to his brother Joseph Southwick, jr., of Salem, currier, Nov. 16, 1742.§

Joseph Southwick married Bethiah Callum of Uxbridge, and she, though a Quaker, furnished refreshments to the Danvers soldiers that rendezvoused before her house on the morning of their tramp to the battle of Lexington, April 19, 1775. The granite Lexington monument, erected to the memory of the Danvers men that fell that day, stands in front of the site of this house. The local chapter of the Daughters of the Revolution was named for Mrs. Southwick. He died June 1, 1791, having in his will devised the estate to his son Edward Southwick. His wife survived him, remaining his widow until April 8, 1803, when her death occurred.

Edward Southwick was a tanner, and died Jan. 23, 1836; and his children, Joseph Southwick, Edward Southwick of Augusta, Me., Jacob Southwick of Vassalborough, Me., and Samuel Philbrick of Brookline, and his wife Elizabeth, released their interest in the house and land about it to their brother Philip R. Southwick of Danvers, tanner; namely, Eliza, Feb. 21, 1838;* Edward, Oct. 12, 1838;† Jacob, March 21, 1842;‡ and Joseph, Nov. 4, 1842.§

Philip R. Southwick removed to Boston, and conveyed the estate to David Pingree of Salem, Sept. 1 1847.‖ Trustees under a deed of trust from Mr. Pingree conveyed the house and land to Isaac B. and Lewis W. Elliot, both of South Danvers, May 27, 1856.¶ They sold the house to Calvin Pierce, who took it down in 1862, and used the material in a new house which is now numbered 41 on Webster street, in Peabody. The picture of the ancient dwelling as it appeared in its last years, which is given on the opposite page, is a copy of a sketch made by Nathaniel Votin of England.

John Blethin House. This lot was a part of the Lawrence Southwick homestead. He devised it, in his will, dated 10 : 5 mo : 1659, and proved 29 : 9 : 1660, to his son Daniel Southwick, providing that John Burnell should have a house lot at the farther end of the orchard newly fenced in. Immediately after the will was made Daniel apparently took possession of the estate, knowing that his father would never return from his banishment, and 28 : 9 : 1659, conveyed it (probably to escape confiscation or its being taken to satisfy the fines that were repeatedly decreed against him as a Quaker) to John Blethin of Lynn, also a Quaker. After the storm of persecution was principally passed the estate was re-conveyed to Daniel Southwick, who was then of Salem, husbandman, by an undated deed.* Three acres of the lot was again conveyed to Mr. Blethin, but the deed has not been found. John Burnell released his interest in the house lot (one acre) at the eastern end of the premises, which was reserved to him in the will of Lawrence Southwick, to John Blethin June 16, 1664.† Mr. Blethin built a house upon the premises, removed thither from Lynn, being a husbandman, and died possessed of the estate. His executors conveyed the house and lot to Daniel Southwick, jr., March 24, 1704-5.‡

Daniel Southwick died in 1733, having devised the house and land around it to his son Jonathan. Jonathan Southwick was a husbandman, and lived in Salem. For £400, he conveyed the estate to his brother John Southwick, 3d, of Salem, shop-keeper, Feb. 28, 1738.§ John Southwick lived in the house, becoming a yeoman, and conveyed the house and land adjoining to his son Daniel Southwick of Danvers, yeoman, April 19, 1773.‖ Daniel Southwick died about 1800, and apparently the same house and lot was conveyed, Feb. 3, 1814, by Sarah Southwick of Danvers, single-woman, the eastern part to Ebenezer Osborne of Danvers, trader, and the western part to Squires Shove of Danvers, tanner.¶ The house was then probably taken down.

George Smith House. This lot of half an acre was sold about 1650 by Lawrence Southwick (being the easternmost part of his homestead) to John Smith, but no legal conveyance passed between them. Mr. Smith built a house on the lot. Mr. Southwick died in 1660, and his son Daniel Southwick of Salem, yeoman, to whom the homestead had devised by his father's will, gave a deed of the lot to George Smith and Exercise Smith, the children of John Smith, who had deceased, March 17, 1681-2.* The daughter, Exercise Smith, married Samuel Pope of Salem, mariner, and they released their interest in the house and lot to her brother George Smith April 18, 1687.†

George Smith built a new house, and conveyed the western part of the old one to his son John Smith 5 : 1 mo : 1724-5 ;‡ and subsequently, July 12, 1740, his great barn, etc.§ George Smith died in 1744; having in his will, dated Aug. 10, 1744, and proved Jan. 6, 1745, devised the easterly part of his homestead to his son John Smith, and the westerly part to his son Samuel Smith.

Samuel Smith conveyed his interest in the mansion house of his late father, George Smith, to his brother John Smith Jan. 9, 1745.‖ John Smith removed to Mendon before July 4, 1748, when he conveyed to Roger Derby of Salem, sadler, a house and this land, but the old house was gone.¶

Samuel Gardner Lot. This lot of land originally belonged to Thomas Gardner, one of Salem's earliest planters. He died 29 : 10 : 1674, and this lot came into the possession of his son George Gardner. George Gardner died in 1679, and the lot descended to his son Capt. Samuel Gardner, who owned the lot many years after 1700.

Lydia Locker Lot. This lot of three-fourths of an acre of marsh was early owned by George Corwin of Salem, merchant, who, for twelve pounds, conveyed it to John Hill of Salem, wheelwright, July 22, 1679. Mr. Hill died the next year, having devised this lot to his wife Lydia. She married, secondly, George Locker, and owned the land in 1700.

Abel Gardner Lot. This lot of marsh and upland originally belonged to Thomas Gardner, and included the "bank of upland neare the strongwater broock ‖to his marsh‖" granted to him by the town 15 : 3 : 1639, and the small grant to his son Samuel hereafter mentioned. He died 29 : 10 : 1674, and this lot came into the possession of his son Samuel, to whom the town granted an addition of fifteen or twenty rods of common "land by Strong Water Brook and Lying Over against Jo^s^ Boyse his house" May 16, 1688. This strip may have been the ancient roadway, then probably discontinued by the laying out of the road south of the Trask burying ground. Samuel Gardner died in October, 1689, and the lot came into the possession of his son Abel Gardner, who died possessed of it Nov. 10, 1739.

In this lot was the ancient burial place of the Gardner family, being used for that purpose as early as 1674. It continued to be so used until the construction of Grove street, which ran across one end of it, about 1850. Some of the remains were removed to the Harmony Grove cemetery, where two of the ancient gravestones still stand, and other bodies were interred in the Trask burying ground.

Trask Burying Ground. This lot has always been public land. It was used as a burial place before 1669, and probably Capt. William Trask was interred there three years earlier. For many years it was used by the Trask family, whose original homestead it adjoined, and it is mentioned in the old deeds as "Trask's Burying Ground, so called."

Trask's Orchard. This lot will be described in the next article, when the remaining boundaries will be given.

EARTHQUAKES IN ESSEX COUNTY.

The greatest earthquake that New England experienced after its settlement by the English was that of Oct. 29, 1727. A drought had continued that summer from the middle of June to the middle of September, the month of July and the first week in August being very hot. Rain fell the first week in April only, and there were but one or two slight showers during the succeeding months of summer. The weather was sultry, and the heat parched the earth, which became dry to a great depth, many wells and springs, which had never failed before, being as free from water as the land. There was much lightning, but little rain. On the evening of August 1, at the close of a scorching day, the heavens burst out into a blaze of flame and a roar of thunder, the terrific display continuing for two or three hours. The sky was continually light with the frequent flashes; and a contemporary writer said it seemed "as if the heavens being on fire were dissolving and passing away with a great noise, and the earth also with its works was to be burned up."

About the first of September the drought was broken, and on the sixteenth of that month a violent northeast storm came on. The storm caused so high a tide that about two hundred loads of hay were carried away from the Newbury marshes. Eight or nine vessels were driven ashore at Salem and thirty-five at Marblehead. Great damage was done to vessels and towns all along the coast.

After the lightning, thunder and tempest came a tremendous earthquake. Oct. 24, the weather was very cold; three days later snow fell, and on the 28th the cold had greatly increased. Sunday, the 29th was fair and pleasant; in the evening the moon shone brightly, the air was calm and quietness prevailed. People retired at the usual hour, and were fast asleep when at twenty minutes before eleven a terrible noise followed by a roar and a rush of air suddenly woke them. In about half a minute, before they had time to become conscious of what was taking place around them, there came a pounce as if gigantic cannon had rolled together. Latches leaped out of their catches and doors flew open, houses rocked and trembled as if about to collapse, timbers moved in their mortises, hearthstones grated together, windows rattled, tops of chimneys pitched and fell, cellar walls fell, beds shook, pewter dishes fell from their shelves, lids of warming pans leaped and fell with a clang, and all movable things, especially in the upper rooms, were tossed about.

Most of the people instantly arose, and many of them ran out of doors in their night clothes, being so frightened that they did not realize what they were doing. But the earth shook so much they could not stand, and they were compelled to sit or recline upon the ground.

People who were awake said that a flash of light preceded the earthquake. It was seen as it passed the windows, and a blaze of fire seemed to run along the ground, dogs that saw it giving a sudden bark as if frightened. This light was immediately followed by a gentle murmuring sound on the still evening air, and then came a slight wind gently ruffling the foliage of the trees. This was succeeded by a rumbling noise as of distant thunder, which came nearer and nearer, and increased in intensity until it sounded like innumerable heavy carriages rapidly driven over pavements, or like the roar of a great furnace, but incomparably more fierce and terrible, having a hollow sound as if it was subterranean. Then the shock came suddenly, and houses tottered and reeled with the trembling and heaving of the ground. The extraordinary disturbance came from the northwest, and went in a southeasterly direction, and occupied about two minutes of time.

Cattle ran bellowing about the fields, acting as though suffering great distress, probably being frightened at the sudden and awful commotion in the still hours of night.

At eleven o'clock another shock came, less effective and quieter than the first, and at a quarter to twelve another. Many people would not return to their beds, but dressed, and prepared to remain up till morning, being very uncertain as to what might next occur, and apprehending the worst. At Salem the people sat up nearly all night. At Rowley they flocked to the house of Rev. Edward Payson, the pastor of the church there, as if he were able to save them from impending harm; but the house was too small to hold so large a number, and the meeting house was opened at the midnight hour, the remainder of the night being spent in prayer.

The shocks were repeated at three and five o'clock, but with abated force, and in due time the sun rose, greeting with complacency the fearing people. It was a night never to be forgotten by those who experienced it.

The great shock was felt in New York and Pennsylvania, and extended all along the coast to the Gulf of Mexico, doing considerable damage in the West India islands.

In the towns near the Merrimac river the earthquake was felt more severely than in any other section of New England. A vast amount of stone wall was thrown down in addition to injuries that were general throughout New England.

At Rowley, many chimney tops were dislodged, and Newbury suffered similarly. In the latter place the chimneys of Mr. Knight and Mr. Toppan are mentioned as having fallen, and the doorstone of Benjamin Plummer fell into the cellar.

Brick houses were cracked and in some places considerably shattered. But the principal damage consisted in the breaking of dishes and injuries to tops of chimneys, in many cases a few bricks only being knocked off, though in others the chimneys were so shaken as to make their rebuilding necessary. Not a wooden house was broken nor a person or animal injured.

The islands off the coast were shaken as much as the main-land, and the ocean was in great commotion, its roar being much louder than usual. Seamen said it seemed as if their vessels had struck a sand bar.

The character of the land, springs and wells was considerably affected. Some upland was changed into quagmire and in a few instances marsh land was raised, being subsequently too dry for its native grass to grow. In the meadow near the house then owned and occupied by Samuel Bartlett, at Newbury, a new spring was opened. The water of some wells was improved in quality, while in others it was made permanently impure. Some wells became dry, and the temperature of others was greatly changed.

Remembering that cities and other places had disappeared by the operation of earthquakes, some people were alarmed lest they might be thus destined. There was indeed some foundation therefor, as chasms a foot or more in width were opened in some places. In Newbury there were more than ten such fissures in low clay ground, fine white sand and ashes being forced up through them in varying quantities. In one place near Spring island in that town, were thrown up from sixteen to twenty loads of sand with some slight indications of sulphur. Upon throwing some of the sand on hot coal in a dark room blue sulphurous flames and a slight odor of brimstone were detected. In another place near that island, about forty or fifty rods from the residence of Henry Sewall, the ground opened, and for several days water boiled out of the crevice like a spring. Within three weeks it became dry and the earth closed.

The people were affected by this earthquake as they had never been before, being fearful of divine judgment for their sins and failure in religious duties. The clergy taught them that it was "a loud call to the whole land to repent and fear and give glory to God." Lieutenant-governor Dummer recommended that Thursday should be kept as a day of fasting and prayer throughout the province. Many sermons delivered on the latter day, and on other days at that time, upon the occasion, were printed and are still extant. In Salem, a meeting was held on Saturday at the "upper" meeting house which was attended by the largest congregation that ever gathered in that edifice.

The clergy improved the opportunity of leading the public mind toward the choice of a better portion; and the people were willing to be taught, and ready to believe. Many who had before cared nothing for a religious life became penitent and devout. Seriousness was on the faces of most of the people, and the churches were increased universally, some receiving large additions. In Chebacco parish, Ipswich, for instance, seventy-six were admitted. The earthquake had a good effect upon some bad characters, who became truly reformed, and afterward led honorable and moral lives. But, in too many cases, when their fears went, their religious thoughts and habits were forgotten.

Earthquake shocks were repeated a number of times in the following week, and also in November and December, but with less and less force.

In 1744, there was another terrific earthquake, which was thought by some to have been nearly equal in severity to that of 1727. In May there had been two slight shocks, occurring in both instances in the morning. At a quarter past ten on Sunday morning, June 3, just after church services had begun, the severest shock came. It reached only about a hundred miles; and was ushered by a loud rumbling, which threw the people into consternation as they remembered the experience of seventeen years before.

People ran out of their houses fearing they would fall upon them: and the rector and many of the congregation ran out of the Episcopal church at Newbury (in that part now Newburyport). In the Hamlet parish in Ipswich (now the town of Hamilton), the shock came when the pastor, Rev. Mr. Wigglesworth, was preaching. The congregation was greatly alarmed; but he endeavored to calm them, remarking that "there can be no better place for us to die in than the house of God."

Bricks were shaken from chimneys and stone wall was thrown down.

At about five o'clock in the afternoon, another and lesser shock was felt at Salem and adjacent towns, and people screamed and ran out of doors. Three or more smaller shocks were perceived that night and the next morning. On the twentieth, another shock came, causing people to run out of meeting at Salem. Eight days later there was another.

May, June and July were all dry months, but whether that fact had any connection with the earthquake is not known.

Eleven years later another earthquake occurred. This was in November, 1755. On the first day of the month the city of Lisbon, in Portugal, with its convents, five churches and royal palaces, was almost totally destroyed, sixty thousand persons being killed by the falling buildings.

Seventeen days later, at a quarter past four in the morning of Tuesday, the eighteenth, it shook New England, being the most destructive and awful earthquake that has been experienced here in historic times. At that morning hour the heavens were clear, the air calm, a Sabbath-like stillness pervaded the region, and at the time of the shock the moon shone brightly, being about two hours high. It was a beautiful night, and nothing uncommon occurred except that the roar of the ocean seemed louder than usual.

Here, earthquakes have always come without announcement, in all seasons and weathers, and at all hours of the day and night.

The earthquake of 1727 began very gently, but that of 1755 came suddenly, like gigantic pulsations of the earth, and tossed everything about, being followed for about a minute with a peculiar tremulous motion, which some thought to be the resultant motion of the first shock and the gradual lessening of its force. But it was followed instantly by a quick vibration and jerks, much more terrible than the first. Dr. Edward A. Holyoke of Salem wrote in his diary that he "thought of nothing less than being buried instantly in the ruins of the house."

The course of the earthquake was the same as that of 1727, from the northwest to the southeast, but this continued longer, from two and a half to three minutes.

People were in a state of extreme fright, thinking that the earth might be in process of dissolution. A writer of that time said, "I walked out about sunrise, and every face looked ghastly. In fine, some of our solid and pious gentlemen had such an awe and gloom spread over their countenances as would have checked the gay airs of the most intrepid." Animals were also alarmed at the mysterious and awful motions of the ground, and oxen and cows lowed and hastened to their barns, the only source of protection they knew, or ran about the fields when no place of refuge offered. Dogs went to their masters' doors and howled; and birds left their perches, and flew about the earth, fluttering there a long time, apparently being afraid to again alight on tree or land. The ocean along the coast was affected as perceptibly as the land.

The damage done by this earthquake was far greater than that caused by any other that has been experienced here. The vibratory motion of the earth was so great and sudden that pewter dishes were thrown from the dressers, clocks were stopped, and weather-vane rods were bent. Much stone wall was thrown down, and subterranean streams were changed, in consequence of which many wells became dry. The principal damage consisted of the destruction of chimneys. They were dislocated in all sorts of ways, some being broken several feet from the top, and partly turned as though there had been a swivel at the place. Others fell on the roof, the section broken off remaining intact, and having slipped down to the eaves jutting over, being just ready to fall; and others broke the roof. Wooden buildings were much damaged by being rocked; but brick buildings were injured most. In spite of the great danger and many narrow escapes, no person or animal was killed or seriously injured in this county.

In the valley of the Merrimac it was not quite as severe as the earthquake of 1727; its noise was not as loud, and it did less damage. The towns along the seashore felt it most, it gradually increasing in force as it approached the ocean. It was felt from Nova Scotia to South Carolina, and inland for a great distance, the great American lakes feeling it severely as shown by the agitation of their waters. Traces of the earthquake still exist in some places after the lapse of a century and a half.

About an hour after the first shock, as day broke, the ground was again shaken, but with abated force. For four days slight shocks occurred daily, and on Saturday evening, the twenty-second, the people were again alarmed by what proved to be only a slight shock. Again, after the people had retired for the night on the evening of December 19, there were two or three more shocks. Dull and calm weather, and a heavy atmosphere, succeeded the severe shaking the earth had received.

Religious services and fasts were held immediately after the first and greatest shock and appeals to God for preservation were made, the people being in a state of almost frenzied excitement. The educated and ignorant were alike frightened. December 24, Lieutenant-governor Phips ordered a fast, saying in his proclamation therefor that, "It having pleased Almighty God, in a most awful and surprising manner to manifest his righteous anger against the provoking sins of men by terrible and destructive earthquakes and inundations in divers parts of Europe and by a late severe shock of an earthquake on this continent and in this province in particular, which has been succeeded by several others, although less violent than the first." The pastors of Gloucester kept a fast on account of the earthquake Jan. 1, 1756, preaching forenoon and afternoon.

The prospect of death turned the attention of the people toward those things that cannot be shaken, and the clergymen improved the opportunity to make a religious impression upon them. Many were led to reflect on the lives they had led, and to seek reconciliation with their Maker, the membership of the churches being considerably increased in consequence.

During the three centuries of our history there have been here several hundred earthquakes, the great majority of them being hardly noticeable, while a considerable number have resulted in damage. We have often expressed our satisfaction at dwelling in a land that was free from the terrible convulsions the tropical sections of the globe experience. But history shows that we are not exempt from the awful rumblings and shakings and dangers that are commonly supposed to belong almost exclusively to other lands. Nearly every year our region is disturbed by these internal commotions.

THE PIONEER.

BY MAURICE THOMPSON.

If I could flute, O thrush, like you,
I'd swing upon the hedge,
And trill a pastoral strong and true
About the maul and wedge.

The gnarléd maul my grandsire swung
And made the forest boom,
While his good wife a-spinning sung,
Or swayed across the loom.

Give him a song, the brave and true,
Him of the wedge and maul,
Whose hero heart and hand could do
The drudgery for us all!

Give him, the brave old pioneer,
A century-closing song,
The whole choir sing, the nation cheer,
A hundred million strong!

QUERIES.

Queries are inserted for one cent a word.
Answers are solicited.

384. Mr. ——— Martin married Elizabeth ———, who was born about 1740, and died in March, 1816, in St. Albans, Vt. They lived in Lynn or Salem until Mr. Martin's death, which occurred, probably, about 1800, or a little after. They had children: (1) Mary, born about 1766; married, Dec. 23, 1792, at Marblehead, Mass., to Richard Whittemore of Marblehead, and soon after removed to St. Albans, Vt., where she died April 26, 1855; (2) Sargent, married Betsey (or, Elizabeth) Meader, and resided in Lynn, where he died about 1795; and possibly others.

On April 15, 1795, Elizabeth Martin, widow filed a bond as administratrix of the estate of Sargent Martin, deceased. This bond is signed, as sureties, by William Hawkes and Ebenezer Martin, jr. It is possible that Ebenezer Martin, jr., may have been a brother of Sargent and Mary Martin. If so, the "jr." would seem to indicate that the father's name was Ebenezer, also.

Wanted, the parantage of Sargent and Mary Martin.

Chicago, Ill. R. S.

385. Marblehead records say that Abijah B. Bartlett married Elizabeth Bartlett Sept. 16, 1792, and that the husband died in the hospital in New York June 13, 1813. Bentley's records of Salem speak of this family as living on Union street, Salem, and of the death of their daughter Abigail July 13, 1816. Wanted, some account of the ancestry of this branch of the Bartlett family, or some suggestion as to where to look for it.

386. Mary N. Brown married George Davis, both of Salem, Mass., Oct. 2, 1808; and two months later her sister Betsey N. Brown married John Davidson, both of Salem. Mary is said to have been born in Wenham or Windham. Is there a record of a Mary Brown, as having been born in any Windham in New England about 1787? Who was she?

Salem. S. P.

ANSWERS.

344. Roger Preston and wife Martha of Salem had son John[2], whose age is uncertain. He was in the Narragansett war from Andover, and there may have been a John of Hadley in the same war. Martha Preston, widow of Roger[1], married, secondly Nicholas Holt of Andover in 1666, and her son John Preston[2] came here as an apprentice to one of our Andover Johnsons. He married the widow of his step-brother John Holt in 1687. She was Sarah Gerry[3] (daughter of Nathaniel[2] and Ann (Douglas) Gerry of Roxbury, and grand-daughter of Arthur[1] and Frances Gerry). He removed to Windham county, Conn., after 1712. In 1727 (Salem Deeds, volume 67, page 199), John Preston, sr., of Windham deeded to John, jr., rights to Narragansett lands he acquired in service with Captain Gardner's troop of Salem. He was uncle to John, jr., and both were alive in 1727.—Miss Charlotte H. Abbott, Andover, Mass.

372. Among Cambridgeport deeds there is one dated March 1, 1759. Joseph Lovewell to Joseph Lovewell jr., in which the following appears: "thence on my own land ("Cook's land") to land of Thomas Pierce." Also, in an agreement (No. 10,188, old series) "between widow Hannah Lovel [Lovewell], relict of Joseph Lovell, late of Weston, deceased, and the children, Joseph Lovel of Weston and Mary now wife of Samuel Morse of Needham, heirs of the deceased," etc.; signed by Joseph Lovewell, Hannah Lovewell, Mary Morse and Samuel Morse; and dated Nov. 6, 1732. Her brother Joseph married Deborah Morse.—S. Harrison Lovewell, 432 Washington street, Walla Walla, Wash.

375. According to records formerly in the probate office at Exeter, but removed a few years ago to the State Library in Concord, Jno. Scrivner of Dover made his will Nov. 27, 1674, and it was proved June 27, 1676, the legatees named in it being his wife Mary, eldest son John (a minor), and other children, Edward, Thomas and Elizabeth, the latter daughter being under eighteen. Thomas Scribner of Kingston made his will March 28, 1718, and it was proved June 4, 1718, the legatees named in it being his wife Hannah, and children, John (a minor), Deborah, Edward, Eliza, Samuel, and perhaps one unborn. In the administration account, "by Hannah Flint, formerly widow of Thomas Scrivener of Kingstown," in 1718, "three sons" are mentioned, Edward being the only one named; and the youngest child was born six months after its father's death.—Katharine L. Morrill, Exeter, N. H.
